Today it is very difficult to imagine our life without the Internet. In particular, the role of the global network in the lives of young people is growing. The Internet has greatly facilitated the interaction and exchange of information between people living in different parts of the world.

The Internet system is also developing in our country, and the number of its users is rapidly increasing. Searching and receiving information on the network, the convenience and popularity of transmission ensures a constant increase in the number of users. Currently, the number of Internet users in our country has exceeded 31 million, of which 29.5 million are mobile Internet users.¹ According to the data, today the number of Internet users in the world is 5.07 billion.² Obviously, the opportunities for receiving and disseminating information in our country are growing, and this is the requirement of the time. As the first President Islam Karimov said: "Today our young people not only receive education, but also receive a variety of information through radio and television, the press and the Internet. In such a situation, when there is a rapid expansion of the world information arena, by all means to limit our children from the media, to give one-sided education, this does not correspond to the requirements of the time and our noble goals."³

The Internet has great potential to influence young people's minds and emotions, their way of thinking and behaving. Today's development of the Internet has led to a sharp increase in the scale and scope of the ideological impact on young people.

However, since there are positive and negative aspects of globalization, it is important to remember that the Internet has similar characteristics. Of course, the global network is a huge resource. However, who will use this resource and for what purposes is a very serious question.

It is known that the rapid development of information technology has greatly facilitated manual labor and made it possible to work with technology. We spent a lot of time on manual labor.

The advent of social media has also opened up a number of conveniences for people. You can stay up to date with world events, stay up to date with friends and family, or share photos, videos, and other information about important moments in your life. The expansion of such opportunities in the virtual world today requires people to be more vigilant. This is because social networks, which are now widely used around the world, know no boundaries. Frankly speaking, virtual life has become an integral part of our daily life. Therefore, the virtual world is causing people to come out of their shell and see the world with false and fake eyes. Relationships in social networks violate the boundaries of morality. Although this particular world distracts a person from work, it is sad that false love and friendship lead to the breakup of many families. Not only young people fall into this trap, but also adults and middle-aged people who do not yet understand themselves. Too many people deny the reality of virtual meetings. According to available data, under the influence of the virtual world, we replace the virtual existence with real life. Subsequently, for sweet words, photos and comments, "falling in love", many people get used to a carefree relationship. Everything is much simpler than in real life. You get to know each other quickly, make friends easily, and get divorced quickly. You don't even have to think about what's going on. Later, when something goes wrong, he forgets. People who face different life difficulties and problems are very active in social networks. Social media seems to bring together people who are unhappy with their lives. But can the people who support you in that world be your friends? Will it stand by you on a hard day? When it comes to dating, "lovers" who have known each other for years do not actually care. What do strangers often talk about? People who spend time on dating sites seem to have interesting conversations. Everything should be in moderation. Doesn't the result of these interesting conversations spoil your personal life?

Do you think that there are no people who love real words and beautiful bouquets and exchange real love for a virtual one?

Unfortunately, such cases are especially common among young people. In this regard, President Shavkat Mirziyoev said: "Today the world is changing rapidly. Most of all, these changes are felt by young people. Okay, let the youth meet the requirements of their age. But at the same time, young people should not forget their identity. It is true that the call "Who are we, what great people are we?" should always resonate with their hearts and encourage them to remain true to themselves⁴. The virtual world manipulates a person. Manipulation is the subordination of the mind to intellectual dependence. According to experts, in the virtual world, a person's perception of time is disturbed, social activity is reduced. Worst of all, in this process, the negative impact of virtual media is not limited to spiritual and moral decline, but also leads to many diseases.

According to experts, today information and communication technologies lead to a new type of crime, which is called "cybercrime". Crimes such as viruses and other malware, preparation and dissemination of illegal information, mass distribution of e-mail, hacker attacks, unauthorized access to websites, fraud, copyright infringement, credit card numbers and theft of bank details. Those who deliberately commit such violations skillfully use information and communication technologies, causing material and moral damage to society and many people. In an informed society, protecting the public, especially young people, from cybercrime has become one of the most important tasks.

We should not forget that the virtual world has a huge impact on human morality. To do this, each person must be able to control the distribution of his time, pursue a certain noble goal and constantly enrich his knowledge. Because information that is contrary to the morality of many people attracts ignorant people who do not know how to properly use their free time. When using the virtual world, you need to know the norm and use it wisely. To do this, first of all, it is necessary to create classes in schools that will teach the culture of using the Internet, parents should control the leisure of their children and allow them to use the social network, depending on the age of the child.
